Big, bright and retro styles

Designers roll out disco looks, Asian shapes and day-glow hues

By MICHAEL QUINTANILLA FASHION WRITER

NEW YORK – Always eagerly anticipated — and copied — Marc Jacobs again demonstrated the staying power of retro style as Fashion Week shifted into high gear.

Get ready to return to the mid-1970s when Bianca Jagger, wearing Yves St. Laurent, ruled Studio 54, the disco epicenter of style. Jacobs has previously revived many fashions of the 20th century — 1950's Dior "new look," '80s power shoulders — and now for next spring: the soft, simple, sensuous revival of sexy disco style.

Silk and satin were cut into simple shapes, often worn off-the-shoulder, sometimes colorfully printed and shown with big-brimmed hats last seen on the French Riviera in St. Tropez, the jet-set playground.

HERRERA'S BIG TRIP:

Carolina Herrera chose Korea as the reference for her spring collection. Today such artistic license requires a very light touch. Unfortunately, too many of these looks were heavy-handed, obviously derivative of traditional Korean costumes. Huge hats were hugely distracting.

So were tricked-up, tucked, fold-over self-conscious design details. Some silhouettes were closely based on the flat-chested tentlike aikido gowns of ancient Korea.

MARC JACOBS A LEGACY

GRAHAM HABER

A SERIOUS COMEDIAN: Bill Hicks wanted others to see the world as he saw it, his friend Dwight Slade says.

By ANDREW DANSBY

ILL Hicks died in early 1994, but these remain Bill Hicks times. Or perhaps they would have proven too much for the comedian and satirist. For the tempestuous tone of much of his comedy, it still originated from a feeling of empathy. Hicks railed against all sorts of bullies and cheaters and hypocrites, but pancreatic cancer took him before he attained the recognition of a George Carlin or Richard Pryor.

"I'm sad that he's dead, and I'm also (ticked) off at him," comedian Patton Oswalt told me a few years ago. "It's selfish of me, but it's like he was supposed to be around to write more material for me to watch. It's maddening that Bill Hicks died before O.J., before Monica Lewinski, the 2000 election. It's not fair, because he should've been around. I feel I've been deprived of that."

Oswalt's not alone.
A generation of young comedians has been influenced by Hicks. He's not around to pick at the loose threads of our times was well-documented. A new set, Bill Hicks: The Essential Collection, seeks to both introduce Hicks to opening up the vaults with rare material for the older fans. The set — composed of two CDs and two DVDs - is a fitting portrait of the artist with some of his best routines on egocentric pop stars and drugs as well as a trove of unreleased material. There is footage of Hicks at age 20 performing in Houston. At that point he'd been

Food's 'bad boy' shows signs of mellowing

■ Anthony Bourdain's blunt honesty is his trademark

By GREG MORAGO FOOD EDITOR

While writing Kitchen Confidential, his warts-and-all memoir of the seamy underbelly of the restaurant world, Anthony Bourdain said he was liberated by the very real prospect of failure.

"I wrote Kitchen

Confidential assuming no one would read it. I didn't have the burden of expectations," he said. "I wasn't imagining the reader. I just got up in the morning and wrote as fast and as furious as I could. I just wrote my heart out."

The overwhelming success of Kitchen Confidential launched the relatively unknown chef into the superstar ranks of foodie personalities. It got him a Food Network show. And contracts for other food and travel confessionals. Then it got him his signature show, Anthony Bourdain: No Reservations on the Travel Channel.

And through it all, it got him notoriety as "bad boy of cuisine" for his blunt

Multiplayer shines in Halo: Reach

By LOU KESTEN

ASSOCIATED PRESS

When Halo 3: ODST was released last year, the once vibrant Halo universe felt exhausted, as though even its creators at Microsoft's Bungie Studios were bored with it.

Thankfully, they had one more story in their arsenal. Bungie may be moving on to new worlds, but Halo: Reach (Microsoft, for the Xbox 360, $59.99) is a more energetic farewell for the company.

Reach is a prequel. Reach itself is a planet, long mythologized as one of the last human colonies to fall to the alien Covenant before the events of 2001's Halo: Combat Evolved. Since we already know that things aren't going to end well, there's a sense of futility about this campaign.

You are part of Noble Team, a group of elite Spartan troops whose missions largely involve evacuating humans and sabotaging Covenant installations. Most of the scenarios involve sustained, groundbased firefights against hordes of aliens. Bungie also throws in a couple of beautifully executed aerial battles — one over an urban skyline, one in outer space - that could be the foundations of whatever project the studio tackles next.

Meanwhile, some of the franchise's more exasperating elements remain. Driving a Warthog jeep still feels awkward. Unlike in, say, Gears of War, there's no reliable way to take Still, it's unfair to judge a Halo title simply on the strengths and weaknesses of its solo campaign. Halo pretty much defined online console competition at the beginning of the century, and it's only recently that Activision's Call of Duty has overtaken it. Reach is clearly Bungie's attempt to win back defectors and reclaim the top spot of Xbox Live's most-played list.

It offers all the multiplayer modes that fans have come to expect. In "Gruntocalypse," you're swarmed by the lowestlevel Covenant critters; in the chaotic "Rocketfight," your team is provided an unlimited supply of rocket launchers.

If multiplayer mayhem is your thing, Halo: Reach is essential. If you're looking for a satisfying solo adventure, it comes up short.

Second opinion: It's Halo, plain and simple. The action is intense — the graphics are improved, but still, it's Halo, so if you are expecting an Uncharted 2 experience, keep trucking.

The most notable differences with Reach are the deep customization options. From armor and suit upgrades, to choosing the gender of your player, Bungie went all out for Reach.

Gameplay is solid. The single-player mode is engaging and often reminded me of C.E. (Combat Evolved) with a dash of ODST. Though not as strong as C.E., Reach still easily outshines Halo 2 and Halo 3.

The big question is - is it worth $60 when just last year millions of gamers bought ODST? My answer? Yes. If you are a Halo fan, if you want to see a fitting end to the Halo story, if you want a great shooter, you can't go wrong with this.

Move over, Modern Warfare 2, Reach will be muscling you for equal time among shooter fans.

ніскя: Started creating routines as a teenager

years and seemed to have arrived fully formed. His style would change over the next 13 years, but seemingly from the outset Hicks was very funny.

Hicks was born in Georgia in 1961, and the family moved around before settling in Houston when he was 7. He gave an early performance at a summer church camp, and as a teen was working on routines with his friend Dwight Slade.

Hicks started attending the Comedy Workshop here while he was still in high school.

"He was very good at an early age," Slade says. "I think the reason is because he started very early. By the time of that clip in that anthology, he'd been doing it for six, seven years. Not traditionally working in nightclubs. When we started at 13, there weren't comedy

Slade says Woody Allen was a key early influence. early on, but he and Slade began doing two-person comedy routines.

Hicks attended Stratford High School, but the family moved to Arkansas, where he graduated.

There was a period in Los Angeles before he moved back to Houston in the early 1980s and fell in with the Outlaw Comics who frequented the workshop. Among them was Sam Kinison, whose inimitable style was essentially an id run rampant. Hicks harnessed some of that franticness, but his approach veered more toward the philosophical. The language could be crude, but from it sprang turns of phrase that framed the world in a novel way.

But Hicks also kept his routines loose. His mother, Mary, points out that he rarely wrote out his routines, relying instead on some general notes. Interaction with the audience was crucial.

"He thought that was a big part of it," his brother Steve says. "Those little revelations that come during the show. ... And things could evolve from night to night. If he'd written it all down, it would lock him into something."

"He was fast on his feet," Mary says.

Hicks also viewed comedy as something more elevated than delivering jokes.

"His understanding of stand-up was that it was a cherished position in society," Slade says. "The comic was looked to as someone who challenged popular belief by ridicul ing it. ...

"He wanted to captivate people. The reason he didn't write was that he wanted to convince people. He really wanted people to see the world as he saw it. ... 'You don't just have to laugh at my comedy, you have to get my point of view exactly.' ... That created lot of tension and drama in his act, which translates to humor if done properly.'

The flip side to Hicks' more topical material were routines dealing with his family. His parents and siblings were fair game for routines, but his handling of those bits revealed a

"I think our parents' friends might have been offended, but our parents never were," Steve says. "We always knew where he was coming from."

After an appearance on David Letterman's show, his parents received a letter addressed to Hicks.

"He opened it and said, 'Who is this nut?'" Mary says. "This man had lambasted Bill for making fun of his parents."

Hicks' family members suggest he was never a cutup, which fits his body of work.

"He was serious," Steve says. "It was fairly obvious he was marching to a different drum. He wasn't going to be an accountant."

Mary adds, "He was always a compassionate person and very soft-spoken. But all those things he talked about, he believed. He felt like they needed to be said so maybe someone else's eyes opened to the problems around us.

"I was just reading something he wrote the other day; he said he was born old."

Hicks found a reverent audience but not quite the widespread one he might have cultivated had he lived past 32. Comedy Central — both the TV channel and the CD label — has done much to increase the visibility of comics today. It was still in its infancy when Hicks died.

But for a comic who bristled at other comedians he felt sold out, Hicks is preserved in his pure lo-fi form. In one routine on Essential he brings up his father's objection to his use of profanity. Bob Hope, his father says, didn't need to use it.

"Bob Hope," Hicks savs bluntly, "doesn't play the (dumps) I play.

Broadcast Management, an Atlanta company founded by former Turner Broadcasting executive Bert Ellis and Dan Sullivan. It was one of several stations purchased by New World last year when its former

declared bankruptcy. Ellis said Titan decided to switch from Spanish to English because of the larger pool of potential advertising revenue for English-language stations in Houston.

"The English stations are competing for $400 million and the Spanish stations for $80 million," Ellis said. "So the math is not good. We were competing for a small portion of a smaller market.'

Ellis said Channel 57 will announce its programming schedule within a week. He said he has no firm plans yet for local programming but added, "Local as you can be is good in the television business."

KNWS (Channel 51) and KTBU (Channel 55) are independent stations airing English-language programming in Houston.

Stuffed chiles dish a symbol of Mexico's independence

FOOD FDITOR

To put it simply, Chiles en Nogada is a Mexican stuffed pepper. But the dish, like the poblano pepper used for the preparation, is crammed with symbolism.

First there's the flag: bearing the colors of the Mexican banner, Chiles en Nogada are green poblano peppers stuffed with picadillo that are covered in a white walnut sauce over which red pomegranate seeds are strewn. Green, white and red together on one dish, as colorful as the Mexican flag.

Then there's the history: At common citation credits the invention of the dish to the Augustinian nuns of Santa Maria convent in Puebla, Mexico, who created the dish to honor Agustin de Iturbide who was stopping in Puebla in 1821 after signing the Treaty of Cordoba, which established Mexico's independence from Spain a decade after the first battle cry of Mexican independence (Sept. 16, 1810).

Let's not forget tradition: The dish is often prepared around the time when Mexico marks its independence, which also is around the time that pomegranates are in season. It essentially has become a patriotic dish and a culinary celebration of independence.

PICO'S MEX-MEX: Locally, Pico's Mex-Mex Restaurant (5941 Bellaire) is hosting a Chiles en Nogada Festival throughout September. Chef-owner Arnaldo Richards said the festival is dedicated to Felipe Angeles, "who was my grandmother's first cousin and who played a major role" in the Mexican Revolution of 1910, which marks its centennial this year. In addition to traditional Chiles en Nogada, Richards also is serving vegetarian and chicken versions of the dish, as well as Chiles en Nogada soup and a Nogada mousse. See Picos.net.

SYLVIA'S ENCHILADA KITCHEN: To mark the bicentennial of the Mexican Revolution, Sylvia's Enchilada Kitchen (12637 Westheimer and 6401 Woodway) is offering a Mexican Flag Enchilada Platter, featuring three enchiladas (Sarita, made with squash and corn and topped with a cream sauce; Hidalgo, filled with pork carnitas and topped with a red sauce; and Mexico City, a green sauce enchilada) served with rice and beans for $14 throughout September.

HUGO'S: Chef Hugo Ortega also is serving Chiles en Nogada as a lunch and dinner special this month. The dish also will be on the Diez y Seis de Septiembre celebration dinner Thursday, which will feature at Mexican buffet ($35) with live entertainment, dancers and food and drink specials. Hugo's is at 1600 Westheimer.

BOURDAIN: Enjoys the world through Travel Channel show

assessments and take-noprisoners observations of the culinary world and its stars. It's a reputation he may not continue to relish, but one that fits him like his best weathered leather jacket.

It's that at times shocking honesty — as well as an unbridled love for culinary discovery – that has won him a loyal following. His most recent book, Medium Raw: A Bloody Valentine to the World of Food and the People Who Cook (Ecco, $26.99), offers fans further adventures with a foodie rock star, albeit one who has mellowed (well, sort of) with age.

Bourdain will visit Houston Monday to talk about Medium Raw. We talked with him about food writing, his culinary travels and his penchant for stirring the pot:

: In Medium Raw you write that you are "the very picture of the jaded, overprivileged foodie." So why do foodies still hunger for your opinion?

: Um, I don't know Athat they do. I have the luxury of not having a reputation to lose. I have the luxury of honesty. I don't give a Hopefully, that's refreshing. I like to think I'm honest. I'd like to the think that to the degree I'm compromised by my associations with chefs, I wear my loyalties on my sleeve. I don't hide them.

I know this may be a broad question, but where do you come down on food bloggers in terms of helping/ hurting restaurants and adding to the discourse of good food overall?

: I think it doesn't A: I think it doesn.

matter what I think or what anyone thinks. This is the way of the world. There has been a huge power shift in restaurant criticism. It has moved to the Internet and bloggers and the websites. And that's the way it is. I feel for my for my colleagues who complain that a few snarky bloggers can hurt a restaurant early on and can really kill the buzz. But that said, I can hardly imagine that this brave new world of bloggers can be worse than the agendadriven, overprivileged, entitled class of dottering old farts who currently occupy the top tier of food journalism. It's a pretty appalling bunch of bent, angry people who despise their subjects and hate their jobs and have been going through the motions for a long time.

Q: [This month] you will be marking 100 episodes of No Reservations. Did you think your world travels would get this far?

: I expected to be Acanceled within months. I never expected to get a show to start with, much less a second show, much less to make television where I wanted, the way I wanted. I'm amazed by it and very grateful.

Q: What do you enjoy most about the show? : I like that I've been A: I like that I vo a much. I have a restless mind. I've always been curious about stuff. I've always read a lot. I'm interested in people and other cultures. So I'm satisfying my own curiosity about the world. I like the putting together of the show, the conceiving of what it's going to look like. I like telling stories, and I like the additional tools that television gives you to tell a story. It's intensely satisfying to me to make something with a lot of different parts and working with a lot of talented people. That I have the world as my playground to do this, I'm living a little boy's dream.

Q: On the subject of food shows, do you watch them? What do you think of all these cooking competitions? Is it necessarily making us better home cooks? What are we learning?

A: I don't know. I think it almost doesn't matter. Some shows did make us better cooks. Iulia Child made a whole country better. I think Molto Mario was terrific. I know it improved my own cooking. Anything that raises expectations about a meal, informs people, makes people want more, is a good thing for society. I like Top Chef — obviously -I've been on the show a couple of times. Even at its very worst, the level of contestant is very high. I hate the production values of Iron Chef, but the contestants are very good. I hate Hell's Kitchen.

Q: You are celebrated for your brutal honesty. But what does it take to be that honest about your opinions - is it hard for you to write sometimes cruel things, or do you consider it essential to what you do? : I don't think about out honestly. I'm not wrestling with whether or not I should say something. I say it, and I regret it later. Really, the only people I care about are chefs and cooks. If I hurt a hardworking chef's or cook's feelings, that's something I don't want to do. I'm not looking to hurt feelings, but at the same time, what the lions of the food profession think of me I really could care less.

Q: In Medium Raw, you spend a couple of pages describing eating pho in Hanoi. It's beautiful writing about a dish that obviously moves you. Houston has pretty good pho. Will you be eating any while you're here?

A: Yes it does. If I get a meal in Houston, it would be Mai's.

: It burned down. A: I was really looking forward to that. It was one of the most authentic Vietnamese meals I've had in America. She brought me out a durian at the end of the meal. From my limited time in Houston, I've come to believe it has some of the best Vietnamese in the country, if not the best.

ACES ON BRIDGE

By BOBBY WOLFF

This week's deals all come from the 2009 Lederer Invitational teams tournament. Yesterday's winner of the award for the best-bid hand as the victim (as declarer of the deal that won the prize for best defense.

In the last match of the event, a simple auction brought Keith Bennett and Neil Rosen, who were in con-tention for second place, to the normal heart game. John Matheson avoided giving the 10th trick immediately by not leading a spade or a diamond. (Even the unlikely choice of the heart eight might have worked well enough here.) Instead, Matheson led a small

Bennett won the trick and advanced the heart king, as only a singleton queen was going to be of any use to him. Both opponents ducked, the second essential play to prevent declarer from getting to dummy for the finesses he needed, and West won the next trump to play a second club. Declarer took this in dummy with the king and ran the spade queen. Again, both opponents ducked smoothly. It is far from clear what to do next. Maybe the defenders ducked because the king was onside — it does happen! Whether there is a case for switching to diamonds by leading the jack, you can certainly sympathize with declarer when he repeated the spade finesse. West now won and exited in spades. There was no further entry to dummy, and declarer had to

HINTS FROM HELOISE Difference between sea salt and table salt growing in

table salt

You can buv

that doesn't have iodine

Dear Readers: Do you know the difference between sea salt and regular table salt? Can you substitute one for the other? The answers to these "salty" questions are below:

Table salt is mined and contains 99.9 percent sodium chloride, and during processing most minerals and iodine are removed. Iodine and dextrose are added to some brands, which are labeled "iodized." Iodine was added in the late 1920s to help thyroid function and to keep goiters from or dextrose added. Sea salt comes from the sea. Normally, sea salt can be used in place of table salt; however, sea salt isn't standardized, and therefore, it may vary in sodium chloride. Salt doesn't expire, but when other items are taste and purity. The key

"flavor" in all sea salt is added (iodine, dextrose, etc.) to table salt, it may shorten the life of the product. Iodized table salt has a shelf life of about five years, under normal conditions, in a dry and cool location. If you have never tasted sea salt, visit an organic or large grocery store that sells products in bulk. - HELOISE

JACQUELINE BIGAR

Your Horoscope for Wednesday, September

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ You keep coming up with questions that you pose in order to find solutions. If you are not comfortable with various elements, you veer in a new direction.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ Just when you thought you were in the winner's circle, you discover there might be reason to back off. Though disappointed, you can opt to move forward in a new direction or explore your options.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Keep pushing for answers. Others seem to balk at the present leadership and issues. You cannot make someone listen.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★ Stay focused, even if you see many reasons a current project simply cannot draw the support of others. Take news with a grain of a salt. You might find that letting others figure this issue out is the best way. Stay clear.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) $\star\star\star\star$ You want to allow greater creativity and understanding. Listen to forthcoming information. It is interesting to see the conflict in details and information from various sources. Your imagination could kick in.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ The instinct to withdraw is not all that abnormal. The real issue is determining the most effective way to stay out of an impending conflict between key elements in your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Keep communication active. Take news that comes forward with a grain of salt. Focus on accomplishing as much as you can.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★ Watch a tendency to go to extremes. Hold off on making any financial commitments. You are coming to a point of view that isn't necessarily grounded to others. Be careful with making any agreements today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ Forging ahead on a set path could be a problem, as there is an enormous amount of flak coming from someone close. You care about peace on the home front. Hold off, if possible, to see a situation open up. Give yourself time. CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★ You might want to pull back and listen more. Questions and conversations point to a snafu. Give yourself time to figure out which is the best path. You know where you want to go.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ You focus on the basics. Listen to friends, but realize you might have to say no to the expenses. At times you might want to say yes, but you simply can't afford to do so.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ You take a stand that is long overdue. Investigate an opportunity a boss presents. Understanding evolves to a new level between you and those in charge. You could be in a no-win situation. A late meeting sees resolutions.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY (September 15) This year, you often find yourself challenged both personally and in dealings with others. Though you might want to throw your hands in the air, resolution comes from focusing on what works for both your professional image and your community status. CAPRICORN provides ideas.
